

The same email, with and without the folder.

I run Atomic Tattoo Removal solo and write all my own email. Here's a real ask — a new customer asking about pricing — drafted two ways. Same model, same facts. The only difference is whether it read my folder.

The ask · "Write an email replying to a potential customer, Alishia. She has a small tattoo and is asking about pricing." (The "before" ran in a blank Claude session with just my website link — no knowledge of my voice.)

Hi Alishia,

Thanks so much for reaching out — I'd be happy to help.

Great news on a small tattoo: those are usually the most affordable to remove, since pricing is based mainly on the size of the piece. A few other things factor in too, like the ink colors, how old the tattoo is, and the number of sessions it ends up needing, which is why I like to take a quick look before quoting an exact price...

The easiest way to get you a real estimate is one of two ways:

1. Text me a photo... 2. Book a free 30-minute consultation...

Either way there's zero obligation, and you'll always be texting with me directly — I'm the owner, not a call center.

Looking forward to helping you out!

Best,
Craig Howard

SUBJECT: Tattoo Removal

Hi Alishia,

Small tattoos (smaller than a palm) are $150 a session.

Avg # of sessions for complete removal is 6-12, and you wait 6-8 weeks between sessions to give your skin time to heal. This means it could take a year or more to fully remove your tattoo. Cover ups take less sessions — it's dependent on your tattoo artist and the design.

There are discounts up to 15% for packages of 3 or 5 sessions up front. We also have payment plans through Cherry.

You can book a consultation at atomic tattooremoval.com/book-consultation or text us at 508.203.1342

WHAT TO NOTICE

The generic draft is twice as long, opens with "Thanks so much for reaching out," invents a "free 30-minute consultation" I never offered — and never actually tells Alishia the price. The Voice Engine draft sounds like me: it leads with $150, gives the honest timeline, and closes with my "Let me know." Not a better writer — the same model, reading my folder.
